

When photography "goes wrong", sometimes the result is better than the original idea

AW, SNAP!

Especially when using analog film, so many factors can contribute to an unexpected result.

You reflect, you accept, you discover.

A zine by Martin Splitt

I develop the films myself and sometimes something somewhere goes wrong. And that's beautiful.

Eventually you accept that your original idea was boring and the result of the "mistake" is better.

From excitement to frustration to acceptance of unexpected beauty - everything is a process.

Life needs you to let go of your idea of the ideal moment.
It is what it is and that's fine.
