

The ancient Greek philosopher Heraclitus said, "no man steps into the same river twice." You can't—the water has moved on and so have you.

Look away from any body of waterwater for a moment and it is different when your eye returns.

No fixed form

Ink is permanent. Water is ever-changing.

Dan Landau

Pen and ink is crisp, stark, and absolute. Water is pure motion, always shifting, never settling into a fixed form. To draw water in ink you have to commit permanently to something that will never hold still.
