

The street comes alive after sunset, where conversation, light, and food become part of the same rhythm.

Stone walls and timber roofs stand as quiet reminders that history continues alongside the modern city.

A bridge framed by trees becomes less a crossing than an invitation to continue forward.

Layers of signs, tangled wires, and narrow streets create a city that reveals itself one block at a time.

As daylight fades, collection of moments found while walking through cities, historic places, and quiet landscapes.

@greghusel

Observations from Korea

A Photographic Journey Through Everyday Korea

A leaving city through the back window of the tram, suspended between movement.

Paper lanterns transform an courtyard into a ceiling of colour, inviting visitors to slow their pace.